HONORS TO THE BRAVE

Memorial to Victims of the Apia Storm.

VALLEJO, Aug. 13.—The terrible hurricane that swept over the harbor of Apia, Samoa, March 16, 1889, wrecking German and American ships and carrying death and destruction in its wake, was today brought vividly before the public, when a handsome bronze tablet was unveiled with appropriate ceremonies at St. Peter's Chapel. The names of the men who lost their lives during that awful time were placed in a conspicuous place on the wall of the beautiful little church, there to stand during future years as a reminder that those who give up their lives while serving their country's flag in the tumult of storm are no less valiant than those whose light goes out forever in the dim of battle.

The tablet, which is a companion of the one unveiled some time ago in memory of the officers and men who lost their lives during the Samoan trouble at that time, has been erected through the efforts, not only of Americans, but also through the contributions of representatives of the English, Scotch and Irish nationalities, survivors of the hurricane. Much credit is due to Chaplain A. A. McAllister, U. S. N., retired, but now on duty at Mare Island, and to Lieutenant Samuel L. Graham, U. S. N., both of whom were on duty on the wrecked vessels, and through whose instrumentality in a large measure the money for the tablet was secured.

The tablet itself is a handsome piece of work carved beautifully in bronze and bearing the words:

"To the memory of the officers and men of the United States navy and marine corps attached to the Trenton, Vandalla and Nipsic who lost their lives in the harbor of Apia, Samoa, during the hurricane of March 16, 1889."

Below these words are inscribed the names of the officers and men.

TRIBUTES TO OTHERS.

The unveiling of the tablet today was also made the occasion of the blessing of the handsome new carved reredos, recently added to the altar, as well as the altar gates, given in memoriam of the late Bishop Klipp, and the sanctuary lamps, recently donated by Rear Admiral and Mrs. Bowman H. McCalla, in memory of Admiral Porter, Rear Admiral Godon and Rear Admiral Alden.

A large number of invitations had been sent out for the affair, the list of guests including prominent people of San Francisco, among whom were British Consul General Bennett, Dr. d'Evelyn, president of the British-American Union; Right Rev. Bishop Nichols of the Episcopal diocese of Sacramento. The exercises opened at 3 o'clock with the singing of America, followed by the reading of the evening prayer, the services being conducted by Chaplain A. A. McAllister, U. S. N. The Right Rev. Bishop Nichols blessed the altar gates and the reredos, delivering at the time a few remarks in which he dwelt on the life of the late Bishop Klipp, in whose memory the gates had been given, and who during the years between 1854 and 1864 visited Mare Island, then only a small and comparatively insignificant navy yard, and at intervals conducted services there.

Bishop Moreland blessed the sanctuary lamps and made a few remarks on the subject of the three great naval officers in whose memory they had been given to the chapel.

The three great officers, Porter, Godon and Alden, formed the subject of Rear Admiral McCalla's speech, and he spoke with much feeling of the men as he had known them. After paying an eloquent tribute to their sterling worth he said in closing:

"The three officers were excellent friends. The two junior officers had great respect and admiration for the qualities which Admiral Porter displayed, and I am sure that all three would be greatly pleased did they know of the blessing which has been given today to these three lamps, hung in their honor."

TABLET UNVEILED.

The unveiling of the tablet preceded an address by Lieutenant Samuel L. Graham, U. S. N., senior member of the Board of Inspection at this yard, which was of particular interest from the fact that Lieutenant Graham was deck officer of the U. S. S. Trenton at the time of the hurricane and was on duty at the wreck for two months after that memorable 16th of March. Lieutenant Graham said, among other things:

"We have today unveiled this tablet in memory of those officers and men of this United States Navy and Marine Corps who lost their lives during the hurricane which passed over Apia, Samoa, on March 15 and 16, 1889. They lost their lives, not in the heat and excitement of battle, but waited with courage sublime, death staring them in the face thirty-six hours before the grim monster came to them in the waters of Apia harbor."

"Remember what a poor lot of make-shifts were borne on the navy register of 1889 and then look at those there today! Today the navy is the pride of the American people and all parties and all creeds believe in it and favor its increase. The ill wind that wrecked the Trenton, Vandalla and Nipsic was not such an ill wind after all. Those to whose memory we have placed this tablet have not died in vain for in the end they achieved a glorious victory."

HOW HEROES CHEERED.

British Consul General Bennett of San Francisco was the next speaker and dwelt with much feeling on that incident in the affair which has become world-famed—how in the early hours of that eventful day the men on the Trenton, which was then drifting nearer and nearer to the reef which meant certain destruction, saw through the heavy mist which overhung the harbor H. B. M. S. Calliope creeping slowly out in the attempt to pass out of the dangerous harbor, and as she passed in her run for safety, sprang to the side of their own ship, upon which they were facing certain death, and gave three mighty cheers for the English vessel.

Major E. A. Sherman of Oakland, a veteran of the war of 1812, and Dr. d'Evelyn, president of the British-American Union, also delivered addresses. The exercises closed with the singing of "Old Hundred," followed by the benediction.

After the exercises Rear Admiral and Mrs. Bowman H. McCalla entertained the guests at a tea at their handsome home.

MIDWAY ISLAND WORKMEN THREATENED TO SAIL AWAY

Marine Officer's Refusal to Permit One Hundred and Fifty Men to Shoot Birds Caused Threat to Quit Job.

The Army and Navy Journal of Aug. 13 says:

A telegram was received at marine headquarters, Aug. 11, from Lieutenant Owens, at Midway Island, stating that the one hundred and fifty workmen for the Pacific Cable Company had threatened to leave by the boat sailing from the island on that day if the order preventing them from carrying firearms and shooting the birds on the island was not revoked. The reply of the commandant was that the order was to be rigidly enforced. It seems that these workmen, when they first arrived there, killed large numbers of these birds, which are among the most beautiful in the world. When this was called to the attention of the officials at Washington an order was sent out that these men should not carry firearms nor should they be allowed to kill the birds. Lieutenant Owens is at Midway Island with twenty marines. The island is a cable landing half way between Honolulu and Guam.

OLD INDIAN FIGHTERS' TALES.

Exciting Times in The West When Geronimo And His Men Were On The War Path.

Chief Geronimo, the famous Apache fighter, who is now at the World's Fair, will soon receive a call from one of his old antagonists, a retired soldier, who fought the renowned Indian warrior in Arizona and New Mexico 35 years ago.

This soldier is Henry George Nabers, of No. 1318 North Fifteenth street, who was a sergeant in Troop G, Eighth United States Cavalry, about 1870. Mr. Nabers was not known in army circles by his real names, however, for he ran away from home when he was 18 years old, to prevent his relatives learning where he was he enlisted under the name of John Tracy.

This was in 1868, and soon after joining the army his regiment was ordered to the Southwest, where a constant warfare was being waged between the Apaches under Geronimo and the United States soldiers. Many were the thrilling experiences which Sergeant Tracy had in the mountains of Arizona and New Mexico from 1868 until April, 1873, when he was honorably discharged.

The hardest battle in which he took part was that which was fought on the summit of the mountains on the line between New Mexico and Arizona in the fall of 1871.

"Troops G, I, K and L, of the Eighth United States Cavalry, had been engaged with about 2,000 Apaches," said the retired veteran to a reporter for the Republic, "and after a hard day's fight the cavalry slowly withdrew from the field. The mountain ridge then interposed between us and the Indians, and the officers decided to take the Indians by surprise in the night and completely rout them."

"Captain E. J. Fisht, who was in command of Troop G, was instructed to select a sergeant, who in turn was to select ten trustworthy men to accompany Manwella, a half-breed scout, on the reconnoiter. The Captain selected me, and with ten soldiers whom I knew would not run, I went with Manwella on the scouting expedition."

"We were instructed slowly to climb the mountain, and when we found the Indians, to signal to the rest of the army at the foot of the hills which would then follow us and give battle to the Apaches."

"Cutting branches and sagebrush, each man slowly advanced up the hill, waving the branches in front of his face, thus making the Indians think that what they saw was nothing but grass."

"As we neared the top of the hill a company tailor who had joined the reconnoitering party foolishly raised his head and received a bullet in the forehead. The report of the gun was mistaken by the soldiers at the base of the mountains as the signal to advance. They swept up the hill, drove the Indians from camp, and followed them for 36 hours."

"In this battle a lieutenant was shot through both jaws. We placed him in an improvised stretcher, which was swung between two horses, and carried him for 60 miles to Apache Pass."

"For my conduct in this battle I received a medal from the government, but that medal has since been lost."

Though Sergeant Tracy, or Henry G. Nabers, was not with the party that captured Geronimo, yet for awhile, he says, he was in command of the guard that had charge of Geronimo at Camp Bowie, Ariz. He is confident that Geronimo will remember him.

The most thrilling experience of Sergeant Tracy's life took place about 1873, after he left the army and when he was selling cattle to the government. With a party of nine men he had gone to Ft. Cummins, Ariz., to get 50 cattle, which he intended to drive to the camp at Bowie. After rounding up the cattle, Nabers and his nine assistants started on the fifty-mile journey. After riding about ten miles the little band of ten men was attacked by a band of 50 Indians, who desired to drive off the cattle.

"A battle resulted," said Mr. Nabers in telling of the incident, "and for three hours, using our horses as breastworks, we fought. Seven of my men fell. I was shot in the arm with a bullet, and just as I was getting in my saddle I felt a stinging sensation in my foot."

"Looking down I saw that my foot had been pierced by an arrow. I pulled the arrow out, and then began the long ride to Camp Bowie. As I rode the blood oozed from my boots. I was in the hospital for a long time as a result of the wounds I received in this battle, but I was the only one of the three survivors who did not lose an arm or a leg."

Another experience of which the old Indian fighter tells is one of riding with the army for 36 hours without water. "After we had been without water for 36 hours," he said, "a soldier told me that two miles back he had seen what appeared to be coyote tracks and that he thought if we would follow those tracks we should find a spring.

"I then rode back with this soldier to the tracks of which he had spoken, and after following them for five miles came to a small spring from which the water was flowing at the rate of a bucket every ten minutes.—St. Louis Republic.

ALLAN DUNN IS FIFTH GOLFER

The match for fifth place of the Ma-noa Golf Club came off yesterday afternoon between Derby and Allan Dunn, the latter winning somewhat easily by five up and three to play in the eighteen-hole match.

Derby was out of form and lacked practice, his driving being weak throughout while Dunn seemed to play better as the match progressed. Derby had not played for three weeks.

The winner will probably be deluged with challenges but does not have to play for thirty days.
